Message from AAST

The Asian American Studies Program at the University of Maryland is pleased to present the 2013-2015 National Directory of Scholarships, Internships, and Fellowships for Asian American and Pacific Islander Students.

Why is this publication, a compilation of resources to help Asian American students off-set the financial burden of higher education, critical right now? Just a year after passage of the 1965 Immigration Act, the mainstream U.S. media began to pay great attention to the socioeconomic status of the Asian population in the United States. Reports in the New York Times Magazine and U.S. News and World Report highlighted the achievements of Japanese and Chinese Americans (Peterson 1966; U.S. News and World Report 1966). The two groups were praised as examples of academic and economic success, especially after decades of racial discrimination. And so, the “model minority” stereotype was given life. It is a dominant stereotype associated with Asian Americans today.

Asian Americans do score higher on indicators of educational and economic achievement as a group. But, the model minority stereotype fails to paint an accurate portrait of the community. One of the most important lines of critique related to the stereotype has to do with “racial lumping” or the tendency to group all people of Asian origin together. This tendency elides national origin distinctions, as well as differences having to do with immigrant generation in the U.S. (Espiritu 1993; Omi and Winant 1996; Suzuki 1999). Hence, one of the most important critiques of the stereotype is an empirical one – not all Asian American national origin groups exhibit exceptional rates of educational and economic achievement. In fact, some groups constitute some of the least well off in society. The model minority “myth” may lead policy-makers to overlook lack of resources in these communities, including the need for educational scholarships.

Empirical studies suggest that Southeast Asians represent the most obvious exception to the model minority stereotype (c.f. Ong and Hee 1994; Takaki 1997, Cheng and Yang 1996; Zhou and Bankston; Lee and Kumashiro 2005; Ngo and Lee 2007). Although the stereotype relies heavily on notions of educational attainment, Cambodians, Lao, and Hmong tend to lag far behind the general population in terms of the proportion of their groups over the age of 25 with a high school education. Vietnamese also tend to lag behind the average population in this respect. Similarly, while some groups, such as Asian Indians and Japanese demonstrate higher than average rates of college completion, the percent of Southeast Asian Americans with a Bachelor’s degree is lower than that among Black, Hispanic, and Native Americans (Lee and Kumashiro 2005). Pacific Islanders, Cambodians, Hmong, and Lao also exhibit much higher rates of poverty than the general U.S. population.

This Directory is designed to address the needs of those in the Asian Pacific American community that face economic hardships and would benefit from resources to help them achieve their higher education goals.

About the Asian American Studies Program at the University of Maryland

The mission of Maryland’s AAST program is to foster excellence in research and education about Asian Americans. Our courses, research and programs examine Asian American experiences as both distinctive and connected to the broader themes of diversity, ethnicity, race, sexual orientation and migration in the Americas.

We are a program of study that draws upon the experiences of Asian and Pacific Islander Americans to explore critical questions about identity, representation, and power. Through a focus on Asian American communities, students learn about how racial categories are constructed, how groups are represented, and how power shapes social, political, and historical dynamics. The varied experiences of Asian Americans highlight a complex racial positioning that reflects both privilege and marginalization. As a predominantly foreign-born group with members that hail from many different places, Asian Americans also tell us much about how migration and transnationalism affect identity and belonging across diverse social, political and economic arenas.

Asian American Studies at the University of Maryland is distinct because it seeks to build strong ties to organizations and leaders in Washington, D.C. and the surrounding areas. As scholars of Asian American studies, we believe that our proximity to the nation’s political center allows for exceptional research and learning opportunities related to policy and politics. In addition, our faculty members are both excellent researchers and first-rate teachers and many have dedicated much of their professional careers to advancing Asian American Studies.

As faculty and staff, we prioritize connections with local and national organizational partners, community members, and student groups. Not only do we offer a vibrant program of study and support to University of Maryland students with our 15-credit minor and scholarship programs, but we also hope to be a resource for the larger community through dissemination of faculty research, talks and symposia, and other opportunities for intellectual exchange and dialogue.

Emma L. Bowen Foundation

Minority Interests in Media Program

Description: The foundation supports a unique, multiyear program to prepare a diverse group of talented young professionals to enter the workforce with specific job-related skills, knowledge of the corporate environment and a strong foundation for future advancement. Students work in a variety of functional areas (e.g., marketing, sales, finance, public relations, human resources, technology, news, web design, promotion, etc.) and rotate each summer. During the four-year program, students have an opportunity to learn many aspects of corporate operations and develop company-specific skills. Corporations have an opportunity to train and mentor students with the option of full-time employment upon completion of their college degrees. All students are recruited locally and, if selected, work for a media company near their summer residence. They may attend college in a different state/location, as long as they are available to work in the summer.

Criteria: Any minority student (African American, Hispanic, Asian or Native American) who is a graduating high school senior or college freshman, has a cumulative grade point average of at least 3.0, is interested in pursuing a career in the media industry, and plans to attend a four-year accredited college or university is eligible to apply to the Emma L. Bowen Foundation work/study program. Eligible applicants must be U.S. citizens or legal residents of the United States, and speak and write English fluently to be considered.

Period: 4 years

Financial Aid Tips for College

FAFSA (Free Application for Federal Student Aid)

Paying for college can be a challenge for most students and their families. The federal government offers sources of aid for college students through several federal programs. In order to receive aid, students must complete the FAFSA (Free Application for Federal Student Aid) each year. FAFSA determines the student's financial need based on their or their parents' income, which then helps universities and the federal government determine how much financial aid a student can receive. The FAFSA application is available on January 1st, and it is best to apply as early as possible.

To apply for the FAFSA, go to: www.fafsa.ed.gov

For more detailed information about the FAFSA: www.studentaid.ed.gov

Federal Student Aid Programs

There are three categories of federal student aid: grants, loans, and work-study

- Grants provide financial aid that does not have to be repaid.
- Loans provide borrowed money that must be repaid with interest.
- Work-Study allows students to earn money to help pay for educational expenses while enrolled in school.

For more detailed information about federal student aid programs and opportunities: www.studentaid.ed.gov

Scholarships

In addition, you may wish to explore other sources of support, such as scholarships offered by one's community, local and national organizations or companies, and even college departments or programs. Though many scholarships require one to demonstrate excellent academic achievement, there are also scholarships based on other criteria, such as financial need, pursuit of a particular major, or various talents and interests. Make sure to talk to a guidance counselor or your college's financial aid office for available opportunities. In addition, see websites for free and comprehensive listings of scholarships:

Internship Preparation Tips

Two critical determinants of being offered an internship include preparing a strong resume and making a good impression during an interview. Here are several helpful tips for writing a professional resume and preparing for a successful interview.

Resume Tips

- Tailor the resume to the job announcement.
- Emphasize what you have learned from previous jobs.
- Use various action words and keywords to describe your experiences/skills.
- Provide specific examples and quantify accomplishments.
- Make sure the style and format is consistent throughout the resume.
- Keep the final resume to one page.
- Proofread!

Interview Tips

- Be prepared by researching the field/organization and practicing interview questions.
- Dress professionally.
- Arrive early and bring a copy of your resume and any requested documents.
- Listen attentively and be aware of your body language.
- Speak clearly and concisely, sounding friendly, positive, and enthusiastic.
- Ask important questions about the job and the organization.
- Know the next steps in the interviewing process.
- Thank the interviewer and make sure to send a thank you letter.
